1. COUNTRY HIGHLIGHTS

More than three-quarters of respondents in Finland think that climate change is a 'very serious' problem (76%), an increase of two percentage points (pp) but below the EU average of 79%. However, one third see it as the most serious problem facing the world (33% vs the EU average of 23%), an increase of 13 pp since 2017.

More than eight in ten (82%) say they have personally taken action to fight climate change in the past six months, considerably higher the EU average (60%) and an increase of 17 pp since 2017. When given specific examples of climate actions, the proportion increases to 97% (above the EU average of 93%).

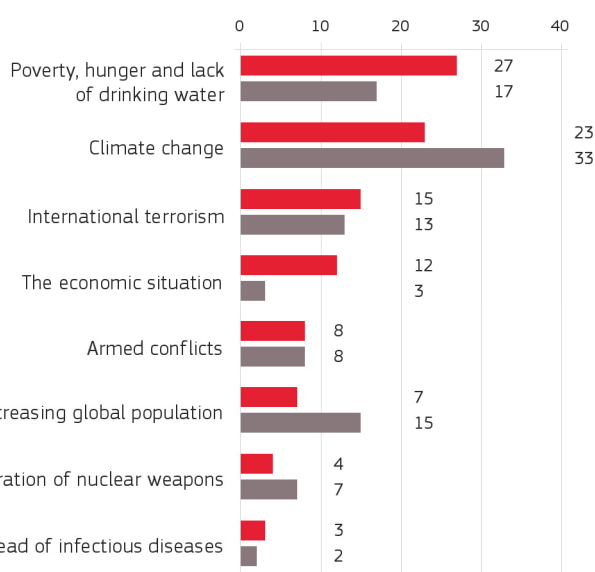

- Those surveyed in Finland are much more likely to consider the carbon footprint of their food purchases (43%, more than double the EU average of 18%). They are also more likely to cut down on consumption of disposable items whenever possible (77% vs the EU average of 62%) or to use environmentally friendly alternatives to their private car (48% vs the EU average of 37%).

Respondents in Finland largely believe that climate related technology and innovation can boost the economy. For example, 87% (above the EU average of 81%) agree that promoting EU expertise in new clean technologies outside the EU can benefit the EU economically, and 85% (vs the EU average of 79%) agree that taking action on climate change will lead to innovation that will make the EU more competitive.

Respondents in Finland are very likely to agree that it is important for the government to set ambitious targets to increase the use of renewable energy (89% just below the EU average of 92%) and that the government provides more support to improve energy efficiency by 2030 (83% vs the EU average of 89%). Most importantly, a significant majority of respondents in Finland (85% vs the EU average of 92%) support making the EU climate-neutral by 2050.
